2. The place of these establishments in the continuum of service and support

In France, the accompaniment of the elderly has known in recent years a political and operational orientation which tends towards home care.

This political will responds to the majority wish of the French to age at home, in a familiar environment. Many systems are therefore organized around this new paradigm. However, given the issues of high level of dependency, social isolation, etc. not all elderly people can stay at home.

It is within the framework of the service and support continuum that VYV3 sets up a set of establishments and services adapted to the support of the elderly.

The temporary stay is an opportunity for the elderly to find a place of respite, allowing a variable length of stay (between 3 days and 3 months). This offer allows the beneficiary to organize a transition between major phases of life. This offer provides complete support for people coming from home and wishing to return there, enhanced support for people leaving hospital before returning home or even is aimed at people who can no longer stay at home and who are thus preparing their entry into permanent accommodation in an EHPAD.

The EHPAD is a solution that has existed in its current form for about 20 years in France. These establishments tend to evolve over the past 5 to 10 years towards supporting an extremely dependent public. The EHPAD benefits from an organization and professionals allowing it to implement geriatric expertise guaranteeing quality support for dependent elderly people. The increasing prevalence of neuro-evolutionary diseases (Alzheimer's type) requires these establishments to renew themselves and adapt to the specific needs of the people concerned.

The connection between these establishments on the same site provides real consistency in terms of the continuum. The complementarity of the 2 establishments offers an ability to offer real care, support and life projects to the elderly.

This junction makes it possible to create a real link between the establishments and this offers a possibility of interaction and exchange between the residents of the 2 establishments. The Projects of the 2 establishments complement each other and offer a perspective of continuity of support for the elderly.
